

 English*Message No. 60*Great and grieving people of Iran,

Throughout the turbulent and eventful history of this land, whenever a danger has threatened dear Iran and its proud nation, brave men and women—such as Ariobarzan and his sister Youtab, or Sardar Maryam and her brother Sardar As’ad Bakhtiari, or Ya’qub Layth, or Nader Shah, and hundreds like them—have risen with determination and ensured the survival of Iran and the dignity of its people.

Given that today, from within and beyond our borders, various threats and conspiracies endanger Iran’s very existence, the honor of its nation, and the greatness of its long-standing history, and given that—due to the absence of a credible and capable opposition—the National Council of Iran’s Revolution was formed a year ago as a precautionary measure, and in fulfillment of a national, moral, and human responsibility, and has worked tirelessly to defend the country by providing accurate analyses and predicting the current dangerous situation—an effort clearly reflected in the publication of 60 messages and statements containing sound analyses, precise forecasts, and appropriate solutions to repel these threats—this Council, from this day forward as in the past, remains committed to continuing the fulfillment of this vital responsibility.

Long live the proud nation of IranLong live Iran
